Our good friend from Whistler, Masako, who lives in Nagoya, came all the way to Tokyo to catch up with us yesterday. Since we wanted to talk in peace (without Zac disturbing us too much), we decided to go to Ueno Zoo. It's a different zoo which is in the centre of Tokyo – and had few different animals you don't see at Tama zoo. Unfortunately, my camera stopped working half way, and I don't have a photo of Masako, but Masako's camera has got a photo of all 3 of us, so I should be able to upload it as soon as she sends it to me J This photo was taken at the entrance of the zoo. I don't think Zac was too keen on sitting with the strangers . . . Panda is a main attraction at Ueno Zoo. It has been for years, and I remember coming here to line up just to see a panda!! Apparently, current one is well known for having its back against the spectator. I think side way is pretty lucky. For some reason, Zac decided that this rabbit was pretty attractive. Or he was asking the rabbit to give up its carrot – as he loves his carrots!! These emus were producing so many eggs! I've never seen eggs actually sitting there with emus inside of the cage!!
